The US news media tapped into Americans’ fear and conceptualization of Ebola as “other,” “scary,” and “African,” which led to the othering of Africa, Africans, and those returning from Africa. Such otherization had real-life, and in some cases, traumatizing consequences.

African Conflict & Peacebuilding Review
Creative and rigorous perspectives on the impact of conflicts and peace processes.

ACPR: African Conflict & Peacebuilding Review is an interdisciplinary forum for creative and rigorous studies of conflict and peace in Africa, and for discussions among scholars, practitioners, and public intellectuals in Africa, the United States, and other parts of the world. ACPR provides a wide range of theoretical, methodological, and empirical perspectives on the causes of conflicts and peace processes. These include cultural practices relating to conflict resolution and peacebuilding, legal and political preventative measures, and the intersection of international, regional, and local interests and conceptions with conflict and peace.

From its origins in queer community conversations online, the term “Latinx” continues to gain wider circulation in various publics. To engage a variety of perspectives on this topic, scholars with expertise in language, sexuality, gender, and latinidad from the continental United States and Puerto Rico examine the language and other politics of choosing to employ or to reject the “x” signifier. Scholars do not always agree, and the tensions that arise point to broader discussions and strains unfolding beyond the academia.

The answer to “what’s in an ‘x’?” depends on whom you ask.

From the plantation fields illustrating the unyielding force of labor to lingering shots of the southern landscape marking itself against the multitude of bodies it will invisibly claim, a clash of stillness and movement visualizes slavery’s profound extensions. These extensions, at once national, cultural, and historical, range from photographs of Civil War battlefields where hundreds of thousands of soldiers perished and were buried in unmarked graves to contemporary plantation wedding sites happily reminiscing over the glorious past represented by the “Old South.” The extensions participate in memorial refraction, framing the event of slavery as a series of visual images held in place over time. In this, the film is the epitome of cinematic-photographic rendering, for it participates in the slow, methodical process of film developing as visual articulation. Stillness and imagistic pause give the viewer an understanding of slavery as the long stretch of modernity, horrifically ordered and repeatedly enforced. Nature, then, mediates the liminal space between movement and stasis, between the center of modernity and its extended periphery.

Historical Performance

Examining the complexities of historical musicological theories and practices.

Historical Performance is a peer-reviewed journal that focuses on the practical, performance side of musicological research. Extending from the middle ages to the early-twentieth century, we examine the complexities inherent between the historical evidence of the sources—theory—and what we can adduce about the more ephemeral realizations of performance—practice—then and now.

The president of the Russian Federation, of course, does not (re)construct the Russian past single-handedly. The most prominent politician of history is Minister of Culture Vladimir Medinskii (born 1970), a maverick historian who has long argued for the development of a useful past. [Medinskii] openly states that “facts alone do not mean very much” and that he wants to “modernize” the “Soviet war myth” to create a “positive mythology” as a foundation of the “moral imperatives of the people.” His writings are openly imperialist: “What kind of a myth do we need?” he asked rhetorically in 2011. “Very easy,” he answered. Russia needed a myth stressing “the unified historical fate of the peoples of the former Russian empire.” Putin, by contrast, presents himself as the defender of objective historical truth pure and simple. He is much more careful and much more guarded than Medinskii. He does not copy Medinskii’s lines on every subject, but develops his own personal take on the past. In the struggle over history as elsewhere in the complex game of Russian politics, Putin is an independent actor.

[A] left that revolves around identity-based groups does not provide the basis for a common project beyond a commitment to multiculturalism and opposition to discrimination. A movement of the left requires a critique of capitalism, or at least of the present highly inegalitarian and mean-spirited form of capitalism, a conception of a better, more egalitarian society, and a strategy for moving in that direction, or at least a framework for discussion of such a strategy. A series of identity-based movements and organizations, even if each of them subscribes to a progressive outlook and endorses the efforts of other identity movements, does not provide this.

We were an odd couple, God and I, God existing beyond all that is, will be, and was, I struggling to feel I existed at all. But when it came to relating to human beings, God and I had something in common: neither of us could be seen or understood by those we dwelt among and loved. It may seem paradoxical to claim that being trans brought me closer to God. Although in some cultures, spiritual roles or powers are ascribed to those who don’t fit binary gender categories, in Western industrialized societies, both religious and nonreligious people tend to think of trans identities as expressions of a secular, individualistic modernity which is opposed to premodern religious traditions. As more religious communities accept openly transgender members, however, questions about the relationships among trans identities and experiences and religious traditions become more urgent. Do religious traditions speak to trans experiences as they do to other human experiences? Can trans experiences illuminate religious texts and traditions, or does including trans perspectives in religious life require "transing" traditions, changing them in ways that represent fundamental breaks with tradition? For me, those questions are answered every Yom Kippur afternoon, when Jews read the Book of Jonah, which tells a story every transgender person knows: the story of someone desperate to avoid living as the person (in Jonah's case, as the prophet) they know themselves to be.

The mistake in uncritically deploying gender in comparative philosophy is that we ignore its role in transforming societies that were nongendered into gendered ones, and in justifying the dispossession of women in these societies to bring them in line with the European colonial project.

Mande Studies
Exploring multidisciplinary research about the diverse peoples and cultures of the Mande diaspora in West Africa.

Mande Studies is an interdisciplinary journal publishing original research that focuses on the Mande-speaking peoples of West Africa and the Mande community in diaspora, from slavery to the post-colony. We welcome articles in the social sciences and the humanities including, but not limited to: history, art history, archeology, sociology, and public health. Articles may range from the pre-colonial period to the present.

The Medieval Review
Current scholarship in the study of medieval cultures from the fifth to the fifteenth centuries.

Since 1993, The Medieval Review (formerly the Bryn Mawr Medieval Review) has been publishing reviews of current work in all areas of medieval studies, a field it interprets as broadly as possible. The electronic medium allows for very rapid publication of reviews, and provides a computer searchable archive of past reviews, both of which are of great utility to scholars and students around the world.

Pakistan Journal of Historical Studies

Critical ideas and rigorous scholarship on social, cultural, art, architectural, political, and economic Pakistani histories.

The Pakistan Journal of Historical Studies (PJHS) aims to develop critical ideas on less explored and innovative themes in social, cultural, art, architectural, political, and economic histories. Scholars engaged with current historical debates about any region and period can submit articles on a particular theme thus initiating a dialogue on theoretical and methodological issues. By moving beyond the dualistic discourse on secularism vs theocracy, capitalism vs communism, traditionalism vs modernism, colonialism vs postcolonialism, meta-narrative vs micro-narrative, and so on, each issue aims to promote rigorous scholarship helpful in understanding our past and its contradictions.

PJHS is a peer-reviewed semiannual journal sponsored by the Khaldunia Centre for Historical Research in Lahore, Pakistan.

Keywords: Cultural Identity, Cultural Studies, Colonialism, History, International Studies, Middle East, Music, Political Discourse, Secularism, Pakistan

Alexis de Tocqueville noted that there is an ethic of service in which people are encouraged “to assist one another and inclines them willingly to sacrifice a portion of their time and property to the welfare of the state.” This form of volunteerism and civic engagement for the betterment of society is certainly philanthropy. Education—at all levels—has long encouraged students to pursue this work in the hopes that after graduation they would be more deeply committed to their community. John Dewey suggested that primary and secondary schools were the central location to learn civic engagement and prosocial behaviors. More recently, scholars have argued that given cognitive research and civic mission of higher education, that traditional college age is critical time for civic identity and prosocial behavior development.

Philosophy of Music Education Review

The nature of education, its goals, and cross-disciplinary dialogue relevant to the interests of music educators.

Philosophy of Music Education Review features philosophical research in music education for an international community of scholars, artists, and teachers. It includes articles that address philosophical or theoretical issues relevant to education, including reflections on current practice, research issues or questions, reform initiatives, philosophical writings, theories, the nature and scope of education and its goals and purposes, and cross-disciplinary dialogue relevant to the interests of music educators.

Prooftexts: A Journal of Jewish Literary History

Bringing together the critical study of classical texts with a theoretical exploration of modern Jewish writing.

For more than thirty years, Prooftexts has provided a forum for the growing field of Jewish literary studies. Integral to its mission is an attempt to bring together the study of modern Jewish literatures (in Hebrew, Yiddish, and European languages) with the literary study of the Jewish classical tradition as a whole. Since its inception, the journal has as much stimulated and created the field of Jewish literary studies as it has reflected its achievements.

Government policies reflect not only the social culture of its inhabitants, but also the greatest ideologies and aspirations that their culture may provide. The attainment of particular qualities, partly through policy, represents a country’s nationalism, cultural identity, and perception of strength.

Rough and tumble play (a characteristic that is more typical of father’s involvement) positively influences cognitive, emotional, and language development by appropriately stimulating play within a supportive relationship.

Transactions of the Charles S. Peirce Society

The history of American philosophy and philosophers of all schools and periods, from the colonial to modernity.

Transactions of the Charles S. Peirce Society has been the premier peer-reviewed journal specializing in the history of American philosophy since its founding in 1965. Although it is named for the founder of American pragmatism, American philosophers of all schools and periods, from the colonial to the recent past, are extensively discussed. The journal regularly includes essays, and every significant book published in the field is discussed in a review essay.

A subscription includes membership in the Charles S. Peirce Society.

Print
We offer black and white advertisements in the interior of all of our journals. We work with each journal’s editor to determine the optimum placement for your ad.

Pricing
Ads are sold by the journal and priced according to subscription rates. Ads run in both print and digital versions of the journal.

Specifications
Ad files must be 4.5 x 7.5”, 300 dpi, camera-ready, black & white, print-optimized PDFs, with fonts embedded.

Submission
Email all files as uncompressed attachments to jvfarris@indiana.edu.

Deadlines
All ads are accepted on a rolling basis and will be placed in the next available issue. If a specific issue is desired, please mention this in your request.

Digital
We offer sidebar advertisements on our each of our journals’ JSTOR pages. JSTOR is our portal for connecting with readers who are actively engaging with our scholarly content.

Pricing
Ads are sold by the journal and priced according to the average number of monthly impressions and remain visible for three months. Ads may appear in rotation with related ads in the same location.

Specifications
Ad files should be 300 x 250 px, 72 ppi, static, web-optimized PDF, JPEG, GIF, or PNG files, 100 kb or less.

Submission
Email all files as uncompressed attachments to jvfarris@indiana.edu. Please include your desired click-through URL in the body of your email.

Deadlines
All ads must be received 10 business days in advance of the date to appear online.

FORTHCOMING JOURNALS

The Journal on Education in Muslim Societies (JEMS), is a biannual, peer reviewed journal published in partnership with the International Institute of Islamic Thought and Indiana University Press. JEMS encourages work on a wide range of topics pertinent to the education sector including but not limited to pedagogies, teacher practices, leadership, and policy as it relates to the conditions and status of education in Muslim societies and communities. The guiding premise of the Journal is that education serves more than just the acquisition of knowledge and skills but the enhancement of the holistic aspects of individuals and societies. JEMS seeks manuscripts in subject areas such as comparative education, youth and youth development, curriculum reform, early childhood education, higher education, as well as others. The journal has no disciplinary or methodological bias.

Jazz Education in Research and Practice explores diverse topics of jazz scholarship and its applications to pedagogy. The journal provides a forum for interaction and exchange between researchers and practitioners grounded in scholarship. It was developed by and is an extension of the Jazz Education Network Research Interest Group (JENRing) founded in 2014 under the umbrella of the Jazz Education Network (JEN). The journal aims to be inclusive of a wide range of perspectives, from musicology to cultural studies, from psychology to business, that can be applied in the field. In this respect, the editors particularly welcome articles that provide models, resources, and effective techniques for the teaching and learning of the art form.
